

Remember All Those Who Served This Veterans Day

Nov 08, 2013

Each Nov. 11, Americans celebrate our veterans by honoring them for their brave service to our nation.

These courageous men and women who have donned the uniform did not do it for the praise or the accolades. They did it because they answered the call to duty, and they selflessly and heroically served our nation. There is no doubt that they are truly America's finest.

The America that we all know is a product of their service and dedication. For generations, they have kept our nation free and defended democracy from tyranny and oppression.

They've protected freedom-loving people all around the world.

And we must also remember the thousands who are deployed all over the world today, defending our freedoms at this very moment. We pray for their safe return, and the VFW stands ready to support their families while they are away.

The VFW understands freedom is not free, and it is our veterans and their loved ones who pay the price. As we honor them on Veterans Day, and each day after, we should reflect on the sacrifices they've made to ensure America's victories, as well as the many liberties we enjoy as a result of their stalwart sense of duty.

Since America's founding, it has been those who have worn the uniform—those who have tenaciously defended American values—who we will be forever grateful to: America's proud Airmen, Coastguardsmen, Marines, Sailors and Soldiers.

The VFW salutes you and thanks you for your service.
