VFW Foundation announces this year's grants are now open for application

Nov 18, 2022

Standing as the pillars that both uphold thriving or uplift struggling communities, VFW Posts have carried this mission for more than 11 decades.

From building local playgrounds and memorials, to organizing military support events for active-duty troops and cushioning natural disasters with incessant relief efforts, VFW members at the grassroots level take pride in continuing a history of service.

In helping local efforts at the Post and District levels across the world, the VFW Foundation announced new and innovative ways this year's grants can assist in enhancing service projects that will further impact communities.

The VFW Foundation is offering three grants operating on a reimbursement basis in order to help Posts, Districts and their Auxiliaries achieve more.

"The VFW Foundation offers these grants as a way for VFW Posts, Districts and their Auxiliaries to increase the impact of the important volunteer projects they do for their communities," VFW Foundation's Grants Manager Jason Couch said.

Applications for the #StillServing Community Support Grant and District Corporate Partnership Grant, as well as the Uniting to Combat Hunger Grant (UTCH), are now being provided to assist local projects set to help communities. Though each grant has been around for years, this year's grants come with new guidelines.

"The VFW Foundation has provided grants to Posts and Auxiliaries for more than five years now, but major changes were made to the guidelines of all grants this year," Couch said. "We have made all grants reimbursement-based and thusly, eliminated the need for grant recipients to provide a follow-up report after receiving an award."

Couch also added that another opportunity will open up in the spring for any local VFW Post or Auxiliary that misses the initial end-date for the UTCH Grant's application period in
