Beginning May 11, Basis will donate $10 from each of its newest fitness and sleep tracker, Basis Peak™ sold at www.mybasis.com to the VFW in support of its programs and services. "This is an extremely easy to use product that reveals valuable information about overall health. I'm on my fourth day of wearing the Peak and have already learned a lot about my daily activity, fitness levels and sleep patterns. Part of reaching a healthier lifestyle is an understanding of your current patterns and habits. Peak is a great product that delivers just that," said John Hamilton, VFW adjutant general. "Purchase a Peak through May 31 and you're not only helping yourself, you're helping America's veterans, service members and their families. It's a win-win."

The Peak tracks users' heart rates 24/7 and automatically detects walks, runs, rides and sleep—with no button-pushing required. And with occasional nudges to help users reach their goals, Peak's always working to improve its wearers' lifestyle, all in a sleek, comfortable design that goes easily from the workout to workplace.

"At Basis, the ultimate goal behind our products has always been helping people to live healthier lives, and we're happy to be working with the Veterans of Foreign Wars to help the lives of our country's veterans," said Jef Holove, general manager of Basis, an Intel company. "We hope this program will get people motivated about improving their own health while contributing to a great cause and organization."

In addition to its support of veterans through the VFW, Basis has announced a donation of one thousand Basis fitness and sleep trackers to the VA Boston Healthcare System (VABHS). VABHS is using Basis fitness and sleep trackers in a study focused on tracking sleep patterns in veterans suffering from PTSD-related nightmares. It will also use the trackers in its MOVE weight management program to support a wide variety of veterans' activities, including the local VA rowing team as well as stress reduction yoga courses.
